Abstract

A system for efficiently converting computer graphics images to film images with accurate color management is described. The system involves the creation of a direct 5   mapping of chromaticity and intensity data from the values used to generate images on a computer monitor to the values used to display the images on projected motion picture film.